

Supporting the training of frontline health workers

Our 20% reinvestment programme

Millions of people in the world's poorest countries do not have access to basic healthcare

One of the biggest barriers to accessing healthcare is a chronic shortage of health workers, particularly in remote communities, where the nearest health facility could be hours or days away

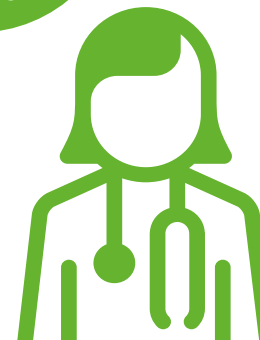

Partnership is key

The strength of the programme comes from the local expertise of the three NGO partners who work with governments to address healthcare priorities

Supporting the training of frontline health workers is our primary focus

Since 2009 £21 million has been reinvested to improve access to healthcare

This has helped train 40,000 health workers

We reinvest 20% of profits made in Least Developed Countries back into strengthening those countries' healthcare systems

Our focus is on training frontline health workers who can help to reduce child and maternal mortality as well as meet wider community health needs

Our sustainable approach

-  Builds local capabilities enabling improved delivery of health services e.g. by developing learning programs and on-line training
-  Educates communities to recognise diseases and refer to health services
-  Works with governments on the benefits of greater investment in healthcare systems

Our programme has reached 11 million people across 35 countries
